1. How do we collaborate with community partners for greater reach?
2. What are strategies to involve more families?
3. How do we gauge the success of these events and initiatives?

On February 8, from 12:30–2 p.m. ET, Join Jenny Bogoni in Philadelphia, Kristin Droege in Kansas City, Beth Duda in the Suncoast region of Florida, and Angela Zanelli in Lehigh Valley as they share successes, widespread community participation efforts and challenges, and areas where they want to improve.

In the spirit of encouraging widespread community participation, the nationwide campaign hopes that webinar participants will bring their thoughts, experiences, and questions based on the work happening in their communities to the discussion and contribute through the chat box.

Sharing Our Cookies: Investing in Data Technicians to Strengthen the Suncoast Campaign and Local School Districts

While school districts were willing to share data, The Patterson Foundation discovered capacity was a roadblock to receiving timely reports. TPF saw an opportunity to partner with the school district's data divisions by funding a data technician. These data technician positions within Charlotte, Manatee, and Sarasota counties are designed to increase capacity and strengthen data acquisition and management processes.

Big thanks to TPF Fellow Connor LaGrange for capturing the background, process, findings, and conclusion.
